I can't say it's PT Anderson's best, but goddamn is it my favorite. Such a great character study that really hits home just how great of an actor Adam Sandler can be. Actually everyone is pretty darn perfect in this. From Philip Seymour Hoffman's balance of menacing and cartoonish, the sev ...see more started my sense of the medium as more than passing entertainment; can't really pretend to be objective about it now, though I'd expected to rate it even higher.

As an exercise, I tried very hard this time—my first viewing since around 1994 or '95—to watch it as if I don't have it memorized, imagining how it would play to virgin eyes. For about half an hour, it was clearly the greatest movie ever made, a stunningly realized dystopic-absurdist playground/nightmare. Then Gilliam is forced to start paying at least marginal attention to the narrative, which isn't his forte, and it idles down to merely magnificent. Then we get a whole lot of Kim Greist, in the role of Not Ellen Barkin Goddamn It Why Is She Not Ellen Barkin, and I was reminded that even at the height of my obsession there were always stretches of the second half that felt really sluggish*, even as the eye-popping and/or hilarious bits keep coming. Much as I'd like to, though, I can't blame that all on Greist. Brazil is a masterpiece in every way...except rhythmically.",
